Echoes from The Past

The New Year's Day so glad and happy and filled with hope in general, was one of sorrow and gloom in the Brennan home here and the death of the well-loved son and brother James, caused a feeling of universal regret in the community. The patient who had battled so bravely and patiently with the enemy of life had been sinking rapidly for several days and Friday all real hope of his recovery was abandoned and James himself recognized the inevitable end. He resigned himself to the Higher Will and made his simple requests concerning his funeral and burial. He saw the New Year's dawn and lingered until the evening, when as the orb of day sank into the golden west, the chill and pallor of death came over the face and form that disease had wasted and the spirit was gone with the glow of the day. Sad heart with the glow of joy, he lay in the old home that night for death had walked there oft before and then for the fifth time plucked the flower of the home.

The funeral took place in the church here Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock conducted by Rev. A. H. Laing of Joliet and superintended by the Knights of Pythias whose beautiful ritual was observed. Interment was made in the little cemetery west of town. The funeral was largely attended by the friends of the dead in this vicinity and from Chicago and Joliet and elsewhere.

The deceased was the son of Mr. and Mrs. P. Brennan and was born in Mokena Feb. 18, 1870 and had always claimed Mokena as his home. He attained the age of 23 years, 10 months and 15 days. He was a member of the Masonic and K. P. orders and a fine young man. He will be sorely missed by his family and by an unusually large circle of friends.

Semmler, Editor of the Tinley Park Times and warm friend of the legionnaires; William Schlupp, Chairman of the Cook County Commanders Association and last, but not least the Post's good friend, Arthur Moldenhauer, Past Commander of Three Links Post.

The out going commander James Barry was presented with the customary Legion ring and the Legion Past Commander's badge.

The following Units and Posts were represented: Blue Island, Englewood, Hazelcrest, Harvey, Homewood, Wm. McKinley, Midlothian, O'Donnell Eddy, Three Links, Woodlawn.

We Need An SRA The Most

Claudius E. Wade, Director,
Chicago College of Commerce

Hundreds and thousands of suicides and murders, kidnappings and robberies, broken homes and blighted lives are only a few of the many horrible things that follow in the wake of a major depression.

Depressions are not human—they cannot reason and understand the effects of their existence.

Depressions are caused by the caving in of the spiritual side of humanity. Man in his mad chase after materiality has forgotten the Golden Rule; he has ceased to regard his neighbor and deal with him fairly. History is replete with the inevitable consequences of such acts.

The recent economic depression doesn't hold a candle to the moral and spiritual slump which has gripped the world. Mankind everywhere has been floundering around and groping its way thru a fog of materialism, sinking deeper into the morass.

Most of the religious agencies looked to this dark hour for leadership have failed. They seem more concerned in preserving their dogmatic status than anything else. They haven't shown the daring and sacrifice necessary to overcome.

Where is there a Jeremiah with the needed courage to arise and denounce the maudlinism of these days? An Elijah to challenge the enemy to a showdown when outnumbered, 400 to one? Where are the people who will brush the dust from the Commandments and dare to live up to them? Where are those who will preach the doctrine of "love thy neighbor as thyself," and live up to it?

What and where is the way out? Talk is of no use. There must be a plan of right action—A Spiritual Recovery Act.

SET DATE FOR WOLF ROAD SUIT NEXT MONDAY

The Will County Board of Supervisors, the right of way committee and Supervisor Wm. Kampe of Frankfort township are very determined in bringing the condemnation suit for the Wolf Road right of way straight thru the C. M. Cleveland farm south of Mokena to a final head.

The matter has been talked over with State's Attorney Wm. R. McCabe who got in touch with Judge Henry F. Ruel of Kankakee and arranged to have him sit in on the case.

Attorney McCabe advises that Judge Ruel will be in Joliet next Monday morning at which time he will confer with the county officials and set a date for the condemnation suit.

He also states that this will be one of the most hotly contested suits ever held in Will County and that Mr. Cleveland will bring professors and experts into the picture to back up his contention that the building of a highway thru his woodland would cause great damage to it.

On the other hand the Wolf Rd. boosters differ with Mr. Cleveland on this point and say that the property would be made more valuable by having a paved road run thru it, for then the public could enjoy the woodland which is not accessible now to the public.

The right of way question has been hanging fire for years. Soon as the matter is settled and contracts are let for the paving of Wolf Road to Lincoln Highway, employment will be afforded for idle men.

Mokena is the only town in Will County that is not connected with a paved state route. The Wolf Road gap is the last piece of paving remaining on the Will County bond issue. Mokena is entitled to the connection with the Lincoln Highway and it is hoped that the county will vigorously push the matter to a final conclusion at as early a date as possible.

Tinley Garden Club News Notes

After the maples shed their glowing leaves,
And farmers gather in their fruit and sheaves,
And all the meadow's bloom is sear and dead,
Summer with soft and tranquil steps returns;
Her mother-heart, ere night enfolds them, yearns
To know that all her brood is safe in bed.

Patchwork of gorgeous colors on their lie
In fluffy billows, and their drollaby
Is sung by gipsy winds whose busy hand
Have robbed the beeches of their robes of gold,
To cover the Summer's offspring, ere the cold
Of Winter's snow conceals the drowsy land.

Mokena PTA Holds Reception Honoring New Principal

The first meeting of the Mokena P. T. A., was held Sept. 26th in the school auditorium.

An informal reception for Mr. and Mrs. M. E. John followed the short business meeting. Mr. John is the new principal.

Miss Eileen Walsh gave a reading. Mrs. W. Hall and Miss Madeline Waechter furnished the music for the evening. Refreshments were served by the Misses LaVerne Krapp, Grace Moriarty, Bernice Muehler and Genevieve Pfeiffer.

Mrs. Minnie Nebeker, the new P. T. A., president made the following address upon taking over her new office:

"When one gazes at the beauty of a great masterpiece, one sees it as a whole, the realization of an artist's dream. Stirred by the glory of a stained glass window one sees not the single block of glass nor the effort and thought that lay behind the vision, but the result as a unity in beauty and plan.

Yet each bit of glass, each tiny stone, each color with light and shade is essential to the perfection of the master piece.

"Every section is related harmoniously to each other, each cemented by a unity of purpose to produce a reality in form and color.

"Richness of the color, size of the pattern, the harmony of artistic planning is dependent upon the perfection of each small bit. One missing stone, one inharmonious color may ruin the perfection.

"Same with P. T. A. Success depends not only on the officers, chairmen and a few members but on each and every one in doing his and her part.

"We all know the object of Parent Teachers work is to bring into closer relation the home and the school that parents and teachers may co-operate intelligently in the training of the child, and to develop between teachers and parents such united efforts as will secure for every child the highest advantages in physical, mental, moral and spiritual education.

"Let us all try to continue this year in bringing together these efforts.

"In undertaking the services which this office implies, I agree to give a fair portion of my time, interest and labor and I know my fellow officers will agree to do the same.

"We believe that the P. T. A. movement is a worthy field for our endeavors and we ask you as fellow members and citizens of the community to give us that measure of your support which will insure the success of every undertaking of this Mokena P. T. A."

ORLAND BOARD FAVORS STAIGHT S. W. ROUTE

At a meeting of the Cook Co. road and bridge committee held Monday morning it was voted to have an appraisal made of the cost of obtaining right of way for extending the Southwest Highway south thru Orland Park along the Wabash railway tracks. This route is favored not only by the local officials but by several on the County Board as being the one which will be in the best interests of the motorists and the village.

Commissioner Fleming reported the results of the recent visit of her committee to Orland Park to look over the project and stated that Orland was unanimously in favor of the route around the school and up the old 'brook' valley.

The right-of-way for this route was appraised at $26,000.00. Commissioner Busse asked if an appraisal had ever been made for the route directly thru the village and pointed out that the fill and slough of the curved road would be very expensive to build a road on and that the road would be full of curves after it was completed. He reminded the commissioners that they were selecting a route for one of the State's main traffic arteries and that they should give full consideration to the future motorist in selecting the route. Since no official appraisal had been made of the cost of the right-of-way along the tracks, it was voted by the committee to have one made immediately.

It is very doubtful whether any construction work can be done before next spring no matter which route is finally selected. That is to be regretted for there would be considerable work for the unemployed hereabouts could this project be gotten under way. The main thing holding back the whole project, according to the Commissioners, is the lack of agreement of the local people on a route.

Interesting Quilt And Relic Exhibit

Quilts of all kinds of patterns and hues to the number of 103 were the delight of and admired by the many women visitors at the quilt and old relics exhibit held in the parlors of the St. John Evangelical church in Mokena Wednesday afternoon and evening. The oldest quilt in the collection was 65 years old and was exhibited by Mrs. E. P. Krapp of Mokena. Some of the quilts were from foreign countries. Very painstaking care had been taken by the makers of these quilts and they also were masters of exquisitely fine needle work.

There were many old relics exhibited, Mrs. E. P. Krapp showing the largest collection. In this collection were relics brought from Switzerland by her father, the late Rev. C. Schaub. Some of these relics are over 90 years old. Mrs. Krapp also exhibited an interesting Indian relic collection. She also exhibited a sword used in the civil war.

John Mattes exhibited his grandmother's rocking chair. This chair is said to be 110 years old. Mrs. J. Christensen exhibited a Bible 105 years old. A ring also reputed to be 105 years was among the relics exhibited.

One exhibit which caused much amusement was the wire hoops of an old time hoop skirt worn about 70 years ago.

The exhibit was very interesting and was well attended.

One Spike Won't Build A Railroad

A single spike just marks a good intention. A thousand of them will hold together a track that will carry the weight of a great train. A single deposit in a savings account, like a spike, will rust from disuse without company. But add to those deposits regularly and you'll soon have enough to support the crushing weight of an emergency—or build you a ballasted roadbed to Easy Street.

Recommendations by Governor Horner for more than 300 public works projects in Illinois totaling $117,843,900 for construction under the public works section of the national recovery act were placed before the Illinois commission of the federal public works advisory board. Water works and sewage disposal plants are most numerous among the recommendations.

Officials and citizens from Chicago and Illinois, led by Mayor Kelly and Governor Horner, got a promise from Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins in Washington that the federal treasury would advance funds to bridge over the danger of closing relief stations for lack of money. The governor in return pledged Mr. Hopkins that he would call a special session of the Illinois legislature for October 3, at which bonds in the total sum of $20,000,000 will be proposed for relief purposes. For the immediate relief requirements in this month, needed so desperately that the poor of Chicago might have been cut off but for the federal aid, Mr. Hopkins agreed to advance $3,400,000. He also agreed that until the legislation proposed by the Illinois leaders was adopted and the money obtained, the administration would carry the state through its emergency needs, even up to an estimated total of $9,000,000.

Attorney General Otto Kerner upheld the validity of the county budget law and ruled that counties can increase their tax levies 25 per cent for one year while adjusting their affairs under the new law. Kerner held that the budget law is operative even though its two companion bills were defeated at the 1933 legislative session. County boards must adopt budgets before fixing their tax rates, and the date of their annual meeting was changed to December. As a result, the next tax rate must provide for 15 months' finances, to fill the three months' gap between September and December.

CHILDREN'S

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

WHAT HAPPENED WHEN A COAT TORE

IF THE discovery that what he had supposed was just a shadow was in reality Hooty the Owl, just reaching for him with great cruel claws, had frightened Jerry Muskrat so that he couldn't move, the sound of Hooty's hiss did for him just the opposite thing. Jerry didn't stop to think what he should do. There was no time for that. He simply did it. He dived for the water as if Hooty's hiss had released a stout spring under him.

Now, Jerry Muskrat is big and looks rather clumsy, but Jerry can move quickly when occasion demands. You would have thought so if you could have seen him making that dive in the moonlight. But quick as he was, he wasn't quite quick enough. No, sir, he wasn't quite quick enough. Those great reaching claws were just ready to close when he dived and they did close. Only Jerry's hands and head reached the water he was frantically diving for. Then he squealed with pain and terror as he was lifted and, hanging head down, was carried across the Smiling Pool. Hooty the Owl had spoken truly when he said "I've got you now." Poor, poor Jerry Muskrat! Hanging head down, he gazed at his beloved Smiling Pool for what he believed to be the last time. Those claws hurt dreadfully. Then being carried head down made him feel as if his heart and stomach and everything else inside him had slipped out of place. His beautiful new house would never be finished. This was the last he would ever see of all the things he loved so. He had been caught at last, and all through his own carelessness. To make Hooty the Owl, for whom he had so long been too smart, a dinner was to be his end. Poor, poor Jerry Muskrat!

If Jerry could have known what was passing through Hooty's head perhaps he would have felt just a wee bit less helpless. Hooty knew what Jerry didn't, that those great claws had not clutched Jerry where they should have, where Hooty had meant to have them. He had intended to clutch Jerry right by the middle of the back and drive those great claws 'way in on both sides of Jerry's backbone. But Jerry's quick dive had forced Hooty to clutch at what he could, and the result was that those great cruel claws had caught in Jerry's coat near his tail. This was why he was being carried head down.

Now, Jerry's coat was rather loose fitting, for Jerry had been working hard and had not fattened up for the winter. So those claws had simply gone through the coat, but not into Jerry's flesh enough for a good hold. Hooty was not yet as sure of his dinner as he would have liked to be. Jerry was big and heavy and his coat might tear. There was no getting another and better grip up there in the air. For that Hooty must alight somewhere. Hooty hoped with all his might that that coat of Jerry's would prove too stout to tear.

If Hooty could have hurried this story might have had a different ending. But Jerry Muskrat was heavy and though Hooty did his very best with his great wings, he moved rather slowly and only just a little above the water. As they drew near the bank Hooty felt one claw tear loose and then another. Jerry began to struggle with all his might and his coat gave way so that Hooty held him with only one foot. Then as Hooty vainly tried to clutch him again with the claws from which he had torn loose, his weight was too much for the claws still gripping his coat. It tore loose from them, and with a splash Jerry struck the dear, cool, beautiful water of the Smiling Pool, while with a scream of rage and disappointment Hooty the Owl flew on toward the Green Forest. Jerry's life had been saved by the tearing of his coat.

GRAPHIC GOLF

RUN-UP SHOT ON WET TURF

OFTEN situations arise on the golf course where the experienced and resourceful player has a handicap over his less experienced brother. Such an instance often happens on wet days when the course has become sodden. Here pitches that on a dry day may stop near enough the pin to enable a holing out in one putt become a handicap on a wet day. They may stop as near the pin but in so doing the ball picks up considerable mud which makes a true putt almost impossible. Under such circumstances a run-up shot that will roll several yards over the wet turf is more desired. Even should a bit of mud adhere to the ball when it comes to earth, it is more than likely to be rubbed off on its roll over the putting grass. Using this knowledge to advantage enabled Willie Hunter to beat Bobby Jones in the National Amateur of 1921.

SALAD POINTERS

SALADS are such simple dishes, so easily prepared, that one is full of clever ideas for different combinations until the time comes to use one; then you can think of nothing but lettuce with tomato or cucumber, and you may have the lettuce, but lack the other ingredients.

How you envy the cook who can go to her ice box and find cooked chicken, celery, and a salad dressing all prepared, and how easy for her to serve a delectable salad with these good things at hand.

To be able to create something edible with the ice box bare and the guest waiting, is indeed an accomplishment.

One of the most helpful things to have at hand is a bottle of french dressing ready to serve, as well as a pint or more of cooked salad dressing or a mayonnaise.

SEPTEMBER
KNOWS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THESE are the truest days of all. The summer with a hint of fall. Spring is all youth, for spring forgets. Amid its opening violets. The eyes of violets shall close. April forgets. September knows.

September knows the birds that sing. Like human happiness, take wing. And holds things closer to her heart. Because she knows that things depart. Spring scarce possesses, being sure; We love things most that least endure.

We love things most we soon may lose. So many blossoms spring may choose. She chooses none. We closer clasp. That which already slips our grasp. The summer comes, the summer goes; April forgets. September knows.

that all ordinary households are supplied, these dressings may be varied in dozens of ways.

Perhaps you have a dish of prunes—just a half dozen—cut them into quarters, serve on lettuce with a sprinkling of chopped nuts, or remove the stones from the prunes and fill with cottage or cream cheese. Take three or four of these to a salad plate of lettuce, add any desired dressing and serve.

To the french dressing for a change add a tablespoonful each of chopped green and red pepper and the same of finely minced onion, a bit of parsley finely chopped and a tablespoonful of finely minced celery. This mixture, if kept in a closed jar, will keep for several days, or even weeks. Take a tablespoonful of this mixture to add to the boiled dressing; it adds pep to a mild salad dressing.

MOTORIZATION of the Seventh cavalry, at Fort Bliss, Texas, has eliminated the horse and wrought changes that sadden the old timers. One of the developments, pictured above, is a machine gun mounted on a swivel base on a truck cab, designed to protect convoys from aerial attack.

Lesson for October 1

SAUL IN TARSUS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 21:39; 22:3, 27, 28; 26:4-7; Phil. 3:3-6.

GOLDEN TEXT—Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. II Timothy 2:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A School Boy. JUNIOR TOPIC—A School Boy of Tarsus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Preparation for Life Work. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Training Christian Leaders.

1. Saul's Birth (Acts 21:39).

He was born at Tarsus, the capital of Cilicia. Tarsus was a gateway between the east and west, therefore a great commercial center. It was a self-governing city, making citizenship therein honorable. It was also one of the great educational centers of the Roman empire. In the providence of God the great apostle to the Gentiles was born in the city where he would encounter men of every class and nation.

II. Saul's Education (Acts 22:3).

1. In the home (Phil. 3:5). His parents were pious people and doubtless carefully cultured him according to Jewish standards. He was brought up as a strict Pharisee.

2. In college at Jerusalem (Acts 22:3). About the age of thirteen, as was the custom, he became a child of the law. It was doubtless at this age that he went to Jerusalem and entered upon his course of study under Gamaliel, one of the most eminent teachers of Israel. His course of study here, doubtless, was largely restricted to the Holy Scriptures. In this school he was prepared for the great work of a Christian theologian. Included in his education was:

a. Patriotism. He proudly affirmed "I am a Jew." He was brought up to love his nation. He was a nationalist of the true type.

b. A love for the Bible. To him the Scriptures were the very Word of God, the final word of authority.

c. Zeal for God. The word "zealous" literally means "to boil."

d. He was conscientious. His supreme aim was to have a conscience void of offense. Because of the blight of sin conscience needs to be disciplined by the Word of God.

3. A trade at Tarsus. Perhaps after his college course at Jerusalem he returned to Tarsus and learned tent making. Thus in later life he was able to support himself while preaching the gospel. One rabbi said "He that teacheth not his son a trade doeth the same as if he had taught him to steal."

III. Saul's Citizenship (Acts 22:27, 28).

In the providence of God, the apostle to the Gentiles was a free-born Roman citizen. He was loyal to his country, while at the same time strictly religious. Right relationship to God sanctifies loyalty to one's country.

IV. Saul's Defense Before Agrippa (Acts 26:1-27).

He expressed his delight that he now could speak and tell his case to one who could follow his line of argument, but doubtless, he was more delighted in that he could witness to him of the Saviour.

1. His manner of life (vv. 4-12). He had been in accord with the most rigid sect of the Jews. Therefore, he possessed the common Jewish hope of a coming Deliverer.

2. His supernatural conversion (vv. 13-15). It was through the personal appearance of Jesus Christ to him on the way to Damascus.

3. Commissioned by Jesus Christ and sent to the Gentiles (vv. 16-18).

4. His consecration (vv. 19-23). Upon receipt of his commission he instantly obeyed.

5. His appeal to Agrippa (vv. 25-27). He was anxious to have Agrippa act on the knowledge that he had.

V. Saul's Ground of Confidence (Phil. 3:4-6).

He had everything a true Jew gloried in.

1. Circumcised the eighth day (v. 5).

2. Of the stock of Israel (v. 5).

3. Of the tribe of Benjamin (v. 5). Benjamin had always remained loyal to the national customs.

4. A Hebrew of the Hebrews (v. 5). He was of Hebrew parentage, not a proselyte.

5. Touching the law, a Pharisee (v. 5). The Pharisees were a sect among the Jews most zealous for the rights and ceremonies of Judaism.

6. Concerning zeal, persecuting the church (v. 6). He proved his zeal by the positive effort to stamp out that which was threatening Judaism.

7. Touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless (v. 6).

Pass Through Fire

Christians are like vases, they must pass through the fire ere they can shine. And often the very furnace and the flame, which they call destruction, are only burning in the graces which are to be their everlasting beauty and glory.

Joy Out of Sorrow

There are joys which can come to us only through sorrow. There are revelations of divine truth which we can get only when earth's lights have gone out.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NOTHER institution of the old West seems to be on its way into oblivion. At least that is the logical interpretation of a recent news dispatch from Texas which said:

"A few years more and there will be no plaintive bawling as a sizzling red-hot iron is pressed against a young steer's hide. Instead, there will be a cold iron, dipped into a chemical and applied to the yearling. A few days after this application the chemical, without pain to the animal, will have eaten away the hair, turned the red skin to white and produced permanently the owner's mark. This new method, introduced by a doctor in Amarillo, Texas, has been tried successfully."

If this method proves successful and is generally adopted, it will not only mark the passing of an instrument which, along with the rifle, the axe, and the prairie plow were symbols of various phases in American pioneer life, but it will also satisfy the main objection to a custom which was very necessary to the development of the cattle industry to the proportions which it attained during the three decades after the Civil war.

One of those objections was an economic one—the fact that the deep burn inflicted by the branding iron damaged the hide of the steer and decreased the value of this by-product of the cattle business. This objection was largely done away with when it was learned that all branded buyers classed all Western hides as branded steers, even if they were not, and made a certain reduction in their value. So the new branding method may lead to a revaluation of hides from Western cattle, since the chemical will not damage the hide as the red-hot iron did.

The necessity for cattle branding in the United States goes back to the days of free grass and open range when the brand was an absolute necessity in order that owners might identify their property in the annual round-ups. With the coming of fenced range this necessity was largely obviated, but the brand still served to place guilt upon cattle thieves and made it possible to stamp out cattle rustling. Then followed a period when cattle branding fell somewhat into disuse. But recent years have seen a revival of cattle rustling and the "motorized cattle thief," who uses a truck in which to carry away three to ten prime beef steers, began cutting into the Western stockman's meager profits. Only a short time ago the board of brand inspectors of one Western state declared that a return to the branding of live stock was the only solution of the new—or rather the revived—menace to their business. Indications are that similar action will be taken in other states and if the Texas doctor's method of marking with chemicals proves feasible the ranges and shipping pens of the West may be filled once more with branded cattle—branded by a modern scientific method and branded because modern mechanical methods of rustling have made it necessary.

In the early days of the cattle industry, branding was haphazard. There was much duplication of brands and consequently frequent quarrels over ownership.

Texas, the fountainhead of the cattle industry, was the first state to regulate branding and other states soon followed suit until most of them have very definite branding laws. These differ in some respects but the underlying principles are the same, the main one being required registration of brands. Some allow a certain brand to a rancher and he may put it on any place on the animal. Others permit different men to have the same brand, but the different owners must place it on their stock in distinctive positions.

According to the laws of North Dakota, each brand was good for ten positions. They were the jaw, neck, shoulder, ribs and hip—five positions on each side of the animal. It was not uncommon for a North Dakota stockman to buy all positions so that he could brand his stock as he pleased. Otherwise, nine other men could use the same brand in other positions, thus causing endless confusion.

The number and variety of brands in the cattle country is almost inconceivable. For instance, a total of more than 8,500 brands have been recorded in Montana since 1878 and it is said that 6,000 were in active use within recent years. Records of the Texas Cattle Raisers' association showed more than 8,000 registered brands in use in that state a few years ago and in Colorado there were more than 4,200.

But despite this multiplicity of markings the old-time cattleman and the brand inspectors stationed at the stockyards in the leading cattle markets could read the various brands and interpret them as easily as a stenographer can read and interpret the pothooks and other symbols in the shorthand system. More than that, they spoke a language, a phonetic tongue, albeit, which was all but unintelligible to the uninitiated. Philip Ashton Rollins in his classic of western life, "The Cowboy," writes of this as follows:

"He would know that 4-2-8 meant Four Bar Twenty-eight since a hyphen always was called a 'bar'; that, because a capital letter of size was commonly termed 'big,' the brand 'A2' was translatable into Big A Two; that because a letter or figure lying on its side was termed 'lazy,' a prone letter 'm' underscored was the Lazy M Bar. This person would know also that, because a ring was dubbed a 'circle,' a letter 'g' enclosed within a ring was the Circle G; that because a circle's area was, according to its length, designated as a 'quarter,' 'half' or 'three-quarter' circle, a scant bit of curve followed by a letter 'r' was the Quarter Circle R, and that, because anything looking like a diamond or even its cousin was called 'diamond,' a figure '5' within a lozenge should be interpreted as Diamond Five. This person would know also that any parallelogram, regardless of the ration between its length and height, was a 'block' or 'box' or a 'square,' whichever its owner cared to term it; that the faintest resemblance to a pair of wings gave the prefix 'flying' so that the numeral '9' between two misshapen bulges was the Flying Nine, and that other designs were attempted pictures and should be entitled Broken Pipe, Sombrero, Spur, Bit, Elk Horn, Two Star, Wheel and whatever. Finally this person would know that still further designs had arbitrary, slangy designations such as 'wallop' (a wide letter U atop another letter U equally wide but inverted); 'whang-doodle' (a group of interlocking wings with no 'flying' central design), and 'hog pen' (two parallel lines crossing two other parallel lines at a right angle)."

In the record of brands every letter of the alphabet is represented, and most letters are found in three or four positions. An exception is "O," which has but one shape in any position, and therefore can be used only once. True there is the "O" flattened at the sides, but it is called a mashed O, a link or goose egg.

"N" is another letter that is not susceptible of many positions, for horizontally it is "Z." "I" is another letter with a limited use. It is seldom seen except in combination with other characters, and is usually called a bar.

"C" and "K" are examples of letters that are used in four positions. For example, an ordinary "K" makes one position. Turn it to an angle of 45 degrees and you have the Tumbling K, on its back horizontally the Lazy K and reversed a fourth position. There are lazy and tumbling brands in all letters except "O" and "I."

After the letters of the alphabet and the variations thereon were all taken up it became necessary to devise individual and unique brands. So every conceivable device made its appearance, ranging from Bible references through poker hands to farm implements, household utensils and lodge insignia.

In the Colorado brand book may be found a skull and crossbones, a rake, shovel, shoe, boot, cup, coffee-pot, glasses, flag, keys, apple, star, moon, ladder, tree, anchor, pitchfork, glove, muleshoe, rocking chair, hatchet, axe, spear, rolling pin, gate, spectacles, pipe, fish, gun, compass, umbrella, hands and dozens of other queer characters for which it is difficult to find an adequately descriptive name. In the illustrations at the head of this article is included a chart of 74 out-of-the-ordinary brands.

So important was the branding iron to the cattle industry that a few years ago the state whose prosperity was built upon the cattle business hit upon the unique idea of "branding" a new half-million-dollar classroom building at its state university with the symbols of its greatest industry. Accordingly Garrison hall at the University of Texas now bears on its walls 32 cattle brands which helped make Texas history. As a preliminary to this idea, E. W. Winkler, university librarian, examined more than 20,000 cattle brands which were used at one time or another in that state and from this number selected the 32 which were to be engraved on the white stone walls of the new classroom building as representative of some step in the progress of Texas history.

There is a good story connected with every one of them but outstanding among them are: the "Austin Spanish" brand of Stephen F. Austin, "the Father of Texas"; the Four Sixes of S. B. Burnett which resulted from his winning a large ranch in a poker game in which he held "four of a kind"; the D brand of A. H. (Shanghai) Pierce, who drove cattle from Matagorda county on the gulf and whose steers were known from the Rio Grande to the Canadian line as "Shanghai Pierce's sea lions"; the XIT brand, generally known as "Ten in Texas," of the Capitol Land Syndicate whose holdings covered ten counties and included three million acres, given in payment for the state capitol building at Austin, the Lazy S of C. C. Slaughter which adorned more than 12,000 cattle a year in the trail-driving period after the Civil war; the JA brand of Charles Goodnight, owner of the famous Goodnight ranch, home of the Goodnight herd of buffalo, and experimenter in crossing cattle and buffalo to produce the "catalo" and last but not least the MK brand of S. A. Maverick, the cattleman who paradoxically became famous not because of a brand but because of lack of one and whose name became a common noun in the American language. For "maverick" is a word found in all dictionaries, defined by the eminent Dictionary Webster as "an unbranded animal, esp. a motherless calf, formerly customarily claimed by the first one branding it," and "mavericking" is a recognized legal term for illegal appropriation of unbranded cattle.

Samuel A. Maverick, a graduate of Yale college in the class of 1825, was one of the founders of Texas independence and a member of the congress of the Republic of Texas in 1845. The exact details of how his name came to be perpetuated in a common Western word are somewhat disputed. One account states that a neighbor who owed Maverick a debt of $400 paid it off by giving him 1,200 head of longhorn cattle, whereupon Maverick turned them over to a family of negro slaves with the understanding they have the natural increase of the herd.

But these negroes were a shiftless set and allowed the cattle that thus came to them to roam at will in the long grass along Matagorda bay. In a few years there were hundreds of these unbranded cattle and people often asked "Whose cattle are these?" to which the usual reply was, "They're Maverick's." As time went on the term "mavericks" came to be applied to all unbranded cattle—they were not Samuel A. Maverick's cattle, they were just mavericks, nobody's cattle.

Another account says that during the Civil war nearly all of Colonel Maverick's employees entered the Confederate army, so that his cattle ran wild and remained unbranded. So they were "Maverick's cattle" until some one else claimed his brand on them to make them his own and gradually all stray cattle became "mavericks." Whatever the true story may have been, the fact remains that among all cattlemen who might be famous because thousands of cattle bore their brands, the most enduring fame came to one whose cattle went unbranded.

FORGOT THE EXCUSE

On little James' first day at school he was given a card on which his mother was to write the date of his birth. The following day he arrived late, and without the card.

"James," said the teacher, "you must bring an excuse for being late, and don't forget the card about when you were born."

All out of breath the next day, James rushed in holding a note from his mother. "Teacher," he gasped, "I brought the one about being late but I forgot the excuse for being born."

NOT SO POETICAL

Owen was a poet, and, like poets of the younger school, was in arrears with his rent. However, he had promised to pay up as soon as his masterpiece was completed.

A week after he had been threatened with eviction the masterpiece was ready to send to the publishers. He showed it to his landlady.

"There's the great work," he told her. "An Ode to a Fisherman," by Poet Owen."

The landlady sniffed contemptuously.

"And this, Mr. Owen," she said, tapping a bundle of bills, "is called 'Ode to a Landlady,' by the same author."

Harry Schoen is quite an artist when it comes to carving stone. He has a supply of pipe stone on hand which he received from Minnesota. He is making all sorts of objects out of this stone from Indian heads, animal figures, etc., to miniature swords. He is finding quite a ready market. Mr. Schoen uses a hacksaw and a pocket knife to cut these objects out of the pipe stone. He polishes the stone and makes a fine looking finished job.

Mrs. John Horras has been on the sick list for several days.

The village board meets in monthly session next Tuesday night.

Tinley Legion

Auxiliary Receives Special Citation

On Friday, September 22nd, the last regular meeting of Tinley Park Unit of the American Legion Auxiliary for the year 1932-1933 was held with the President, Mrs. George Rowden, presiding. After the usual presentation of the flag and pledge of allegiance to it, the President proceeded with the business to come before the meeting.

The meeting was largely devoted to the reading of the annual report of officers and committee chairmen. These were very interesting as they were a resume of the work done during the year.

Mrs. Albert Felton, Rehabilitation Chairman, read a letter received from the American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Illinois, which contained the good news that our Unit received a citation for its rehabilitation work during the year. This citation is a yellow ribbon with the word "Rehabilitation" and the year "1933" printed on it. Not only was our Chairman thrilled by this but the entire membership was proud to receive such recognition. The Unit also received honorable mention from the Department of Illinois for its outstanding Americanism work which was conducted, during the year, under the guidance of our able Americanism chairman, Mrs. J. Swisher. We are very proud to have had such loyal hard workers as Mrs. Felton and Mrs. Swisher as we all know that it was only through the hard work and faithful service of these two chairmen that made it possible for the Unit to receive such recognition.

The president then called for nominations for delegates and alternates to the Cook County Council meetings for the coming year. The delegates, other than the president, who were nominated and elected are: Mrs. Harold Berg and Mrs. Carl Winsor. The alternates are: Mrs. Herman Freitag, Mrs. Walter Mager and Mrs. Charles Wallin.

Again Tinley Park Unit has received recognition from the Fourth District. In July, this year, Mrs. Wm. B. West was nominated and elected Fourth District Chaplain for the coming year and now, the newly elected District Director has appointed Mrs. George Rowden as Americanism chairman for the 4th District for the coming year. With her ability we are sure she will perform her duties in that capacity splendidly.

President Rowden presented Mrs. Harry Brandau and Mrs. W. B. West with a beautiful gift for being 100% in their attendance at meetings during the year.

At the close of the meeting a beautiful bouquet of flowers was presented to President Rowden from the members of the Unit in appreciation of all she has done on behalf of our Unit. She has worked hard and untiringly and has given unselfishly of her time.

After the adjournment there was a little surprise in store for President Rowden. A lovely song was sung to her by Mrs. Herman Freitag and the balance of the members joined in the chorus. The song was sung to the tune of "Smiles" and was prepared by our Music Chairman, Mrs. Carl Winsor. A game was then played and Mrs. Winsor walked off with the prize. The refreshments consisted of cookies and ice cream and we all had an enjoyable evening.

The next meeting of Tinley Park Unit will be held on Friday, October 13th. Please make a note of the date and do your best to attend. (We are not a bit superstitious.)

Some folks may think it is strange that two notices regarding the Auxiliary under different names, appear in this newspaper, but the explanation is that our regular meeting preceded the installation of officers held on Saturday September 23rd and the writer was still publicity chairman. As such, it was her duty to report that meeting. However, from now on Mrs. Lester Stoltenberg, who has been appointed publicity chairman for the ensuing year, will report the meetings. Look for her report of the installation elsewhere in this paper.

HENRY FORD ONCE WORKED ON WILL CO., FARM

Henry Ford of automobile fame once lived in Will County, Illinois, in the days of the early '80's when he was employed as a farm hand by Boylan of Spencer, Illinois.

The Wizard of the auto world along in 1881 dropped off a train at Manhattan, Illinois in the summer of that year looking for work as a harvest hand. The sandy complexioned, tall youth of winning personality reached the rural district between Manhattan and New Lenox shocked oafs, overhauled a binder he had never seen before and gave a group of farmers some pointers on the possibilities of gasoline as a means of propelling a binder.

In that year the first wire binder was being used. The army worms were very bad and there was a lot of hay to put up, so farmers had to start on their oats before they were really fit to harvest. Mr. Boylan had 60 acres down before he could start to stack and needed help badly. In those days there were no bundle carriers.

One Sunday morning the farmer's son went over to the neighboring village of Manhattan to see if he could find some help. It was about that time a new railroad went through and there were a lot of men at the depot. One of them was a tall young fellow, and bright looking. The farmer asked him if he wanted work and he asked what pay he would receive. He was told he would be paid as much as he could earn.

He had never shocked any oats but said he would try, and the next day he went into the field. He shocked oats as good as the farmer in a few days. He was tall and very slight, and was constantly talking gasoline engines.

One rainy day Mr. Ford and his new found employer overhauled the binder. He took the lead right away showing the farmer how nicely it could be run with gasoline, with less choking up, which was true, as lots of people are now using the gasoline engine on the binder. He displayed a great knowledge of machinery as he supervised the whole thing.

A little while after that he wanted to see the prison and the mills at Joliet. That was the last the farmer saw of him until he bought his first auto. The farmer did not know Henry Ford when he went to Detroit and saw him in the assembly room. Mr. Ford asked the farmer where he was from and he told him "Will County". Ford said "I worked for a man down there a great many years ago; maybe when you come back in the afternoon I can find out who he was. I will look in my diary."

In the afternoon he brought the diary. It was yellow with age. He found the name and it was John Boylan. Mr. Ford worked for $1.25 per day when he was employed on the Illinois farm.

75th Anniversary of Lincoln-Douglas Famous Debate

This Fall marks the seventy-fifth anniversary of the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates, classed as the greatest verbal battles ever held on the American continent, and an effort is being made by Dr. Louis A. Warren, director of the Lincoln National Life Foundation, of Fort Wayne, Ind., one of the world's most noted Lincoln authorities, to find as many people as possible who heard these historic speeches.

Seven Illinois cities entertained the debaters in 1858: Ottawa, August 21st; Freeport, August 27th; Jonesboro, September 15th; Charleston, September 18th; Galesburg, October 7th; Quincy, October 13th, and Alton, October 15th.

"Should slavery be extended in the United States and territories?" might be suggested as the major question discussed, although no formal statement of a specific theme for debate was submitted. Douglas supported the affirmative and Lincoln the negative side.

"Two great debates stand out in the history of American literature," said Dr. Warren. "the Webster-Hayne discussion of 1830 and the Lincoln-Douglas contest of 1858. Judged from the wide public interest it created and the ultimate political movements it set in motion, the Lincoln-Douglas series should be set apart as the most important in our history, and the seventy-fifth anniversary of their delivery should not pass unnoticed."

One task which should be undertaken on this anniversary occasion, Dr. Warren suggested, is the compiling of an honor roll comprised of all those who attended any one of the seven debates. To this end Dr. Warren has asked the News-Bulletin to assist in finding through its editorial columns as many people as possible who are eligible for a place on this roll of honor.

It would be of special interest, he pointed out, to learn how far each individual now living was obliged to travel to reach the scene of the debate, also the most vivid impression remaining with them.

CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA
Civil wars, the anti-Christian movement and the rise of nationalism have caused a decline of from 50,000 to 70,000 in Christian church membership in China, according to the third installment of the report of the laymen's foreign missions inquiry made public by Albert Scott, chairman, says the Literary Digest.
The total number of Christians in China is assumed to be 400,000. "Since the growth of the national spirit Christianity has come under bitter attack as tending to denationalize its adherents," says the report. "A genuine and acute sense of shame seems to have taken possession of not a few Christians. Nationalism has put Christianity on the defensive to prove the patriotism of its adherents."

SYNOPSIS

A girl finds herself in a taxicab in New York with a strange man who speaks of "an awful shock." He leaves her for a moment, and she drives on, for she fears him. She stops at the Biltmore, wondering who she is. Her memory is gone. She has a wedding ring. The nameless girl meets a young woman who speaks of her desire to go to Reno for a divorce, if she can get the money. The woman vanishes with the nameless girl's $900. An elderly woman, Mrs. Oscar Du Val, cordially greets the nameless girl, addressing her as "Doris," wife of Mrs. Du Val's son, Rocky. Rocky is abroad, and Doris, bewildered, is taken to the home of Mrs. Du Val and her sculptor husband, Oscar. Doris falls in love with Rocky's photograph, but cannot remember having married him. Visiting a store she is astounded when a saleswoman insists she hide from observation. Rocky returns. He demands to know who she is and why his wife sent her to his home. She cannot tell him. They agree, for the sake of his parents, to pretend, for the time being, they are husband and wife.

Rocky pulled a chair up to the table and sat down. "Draw up, dream girl," he said gleefully. "Rather, darling, let me arrange your pillows for you."

There seemed nothing else she could do about it, so Doris scrambled into bed. Rocky poked pillows behind her. "Jolly, isn't it?"

"What?"

"Oh—having our own little love nest like this and being so fond of one another!"

Doris' spoon poked tremblingly into her grapefruit. She felt a little reckless about where the juice spattered. "It may seem jolly to you," she looked at him unsmilingly.

Rocky opened his eyes in pretended surprise. "You mean to say it isn't to you—with your love of adventure? Pickle woman, and on our wedding day you were so crazy about me!"

Doris was scarlet. For a moment she thought that Rocky meant they had had a wedding day. It was too confusing. If only he would stop teasing. It was baffling enough not to know what had happened to her.

"After breakfast we'll drive into the village," said Rocky. "I want to call up Doris without Mother finding it out."

"Go alone."

"You don't crave my company."

"Frankly I don't."

He looked at her. She saw that his capricious mood was gone. He was hurt inexplicably, and angry.

"Well, I'm not so d-d keen about you either. It's to save Mother's feelings that I'm going to take you," His face looked griefed, childishly so. "She thinks that we can't bear to be out of one another's sight!"

Doris didn't know what to say. His making fun of love infuriated her. She looked at him in stunned helplessness.

Who was she? What was she doing here? Where was the real Doris? Why wasn't she here instead?

Mrs. Du Val rapped at the door and came in. "Ah my children—like quiet little love-birds you sit!" She glanced at Doris' plate. "But you do not eat!" She shook a finger. "You are too excited. Rocky has talked to you too much."

Doris smiled. "Yes—he hasn't given me time to dress, even!" She gave Rocky a sly glance.

He came out of his gloom with a humorous leer. "But you're so beautiful—dressed or undressed. Why should I?"

Doris drove to the village with him. She sat quietly except for an occasional answer to his sarcastic references to her "sustained innocence"—her "touching consideration" for his parents! When she could stand it no longer she cried:

"Oh, keep still. You haven't the faintest idea of what you're talking about."

"Maybe not," Rocky stopped the car and got out. "But I'll know soon. You wait here while I telephone."

He came out a few minutes later, looking glum. "A fine bunch of women I pick for myself," he growled. "I come home to a strange bride, and my real wife is nowhere to be found."

"Couldn't you get her?"

"Couldn't I get her?" shouted Rocky. "And you let me go through all this nonsense of telephoning her! How much longer do you intend making a jackass out of me?" He eyed her accusingly. "You knew all the time she wasn't there."

She felt as if her last nerve was about to snap. "Stop speaking to me in that tone," she cried. "And if you happen to have been born a jackass, is that my fault? Stop the car. I prefer to walk."

Rocky stepped on the gas. "Stop it! Like h—! From now on, this fight gets serious! There are plenty of unpleasant places for clever girl crooks in New York!" He stamped violently on the starter. "Where do you suppose that woman is at this hour? Not home from last night's party, I expect."

"You—you're unspeakable." She drew herself to the farther side of the car. She was seething. Rocky seemed engaged in a bitter brooding. They said nothing more until he opened the door of the car for her to alight.

Doris retreated from his extended hand. "I can get out of this car quite well without assistance."

He seized her arm and pulled her out roughly. "Stop acting like a fool!"

They stood eye to eye, Doris on the step above him, outraged, panting with fury. At that moment nothing but physical violence could have satisfied Doris. This man had her so completely at his mercy. She was so helpless. She had no place to go—no one to turn to. And he insulted her, humiliated her. She could not think of words to express her fury. Everything else had gone from her mind.

He too was filled with hate. His mouth was drawn into ugly lines. His eyes looked at her mercilessly.

"You—" he began.

The cheery voice of Oscar Du Val boomed at them. "Ah, my children, home again! Good. I thought you might be late for lunch."

Rocky reached out his hand toward her, smiling hypocritically. It was the last straw. She raised her fists in the air and struck out desperately. In her madness she hit the umbrella stand. It knocked over, hitting Rocky violently.

Taken by surprise, he uttered a loud "Ouch."

"I hope it hurts!"

Rocky whispered, venomously, "This is the limit. This ends everything." He rubbed his wounds tenderly.

"And not too soon for me, either!" said Doris.

They went in to lunch. Mr. and Mrs. Du Val noticed nothing amiss.

The meal seemed long and unendurable. Rocky was silent and brooding. Doris felt depressed. Where did she belong? Where should she go?

She considered taking Mrs. Du Val into her confidence. Rocky's mother had been so kind—had seemed such a refuge. Yet had that not been partly because she was Rocky's wife, because she was supposed to have the Du Val seed flourishing within her?

"I Don't Think I Care at All About Having You Kiss Me," She said Confusedly.

Doris felt more unhappy than ever. She had known, at least, all along that she was not going to have a baby. Mrs. Du Val would be very angry when she found out how Doris had taken advantage of her sympathy and love.

What should she do?

But the kindly Du Vals were perceiving at last that something had gone wrong with the newweds. Doris did not eat. Rocky glowered.

Oscar Du Val pushed back his chair. "Rocky you go off somewhere with Doris for a few days where you can be alone together."

"Yes, yes," said Mrs. Du Val eagerly. "It is not good for young people to be always with old ones—"

"We love it," Doris spoke impulsively.

Rocky glared at her.

"As a matter of fact, Doris and I are leaving for New York this afternoon, if you don't mind," he said.

Doris' heart leaped with fear. So she was to leave this place—leave Mrs. Du Val, her only friend in the world. And where should she go in New York?

She rose. "I'll go and pack," she said. "What time does the train leave?"

"I'll drive you in my car," said Rocky.

Doris walked swiftly out of the room so that they would not see her tears. Rocky's bitter taunt recurred to her—he seemed to think she was some kind of an evil woman. His eyes were so unfriendly and cruel. If he knew the truth he would turn her over to the police. Perhaps he would anyway. The least he would do would be to put her away in an asylum.

She packed quickly. What the future held in store for her she could not guess. This adventure had turned out to be farcical. "To anyone else it would be farcical although it doesn't seem so funny to me," she thought.

Doris accused herself unmercifully. She ought to have known that Mrs. Du Val was not acquainted with her. One does not run into friends so easily when one is lost in New York.

How, now, would she find her friends, her parents, her—(her mind shied away)—her husband? Then she thought again with terror of the man in the cab. If she did find her friends, it meant finding that man again.

Of course he was her husband.

She looked at herself earnestly in the mirror. She was dressed in the tweed that she had worn on the day of her meeting with Mrs. Du Val. The face, young and anxious, looked back at her. She was absolutely alone in the world. And now she was going out in it—without friends, without money.

Rocky knocked peremptorily on the door.

"Are you ready?" he asked curtly.

"Certainly," she said promptly.

She gathered up her gloves. She took one look around the pretty faultless room. Her haven. "Good-by," she thought silently. "Good-by."

Bending her head so that Rocky might not see her face she left the room.

She took her leave in a daze. Mrs. Du Val full of admonitions, smiles and tears—Oscar Du Val neglecting his precious work to bid her farewell—the kisses, the smiling servants—Rocky at the wheel grim, saying little—then the grinding gears—and the last look over the shoulder—

Then she was riding over the road beside Rocky.

He spoke once on the long journey: "I'll take you as far as New York," he said unpleasantly. "But then I'm afraid we'll have to part company—"

Frightened, horrified, forlorn, Doris still felt that she would rather die than let him know how completely helpless she was.

"You can drop me at the Biltmore," she said.

"O. K."

Doris' throat was dry, her cheeks hot from the sun. She hoped that she would not cry. It would be awful if she broke down in front of Rocky.

The drive was never going to end. Doris decided that she could sleep in the park that night. She could pawn her baggage and look for a job.

Rocky smoked cigarette after cigarette, his eyes squinting, his mouth sardonic and unhappy. The hills gave way to the Bronx River parkway.

Then Rocky turned off Fifth avenue into a side street and brought the car to a standstill. He got out, walked around the car and opened the door. She looked at him blankly.

"Well?"

"Get out!"

"But why—here?"

"I've decided you're coming with me to have a showdown with Doris."

"Is this—this where you live?"

"As if you didn't know it."

Doris sighed. It was so hot. She opened her bag and drew out her powder case. "Come on," Rocky commanded impatiently.

"Oh—all right." She had small hope that Rocky's wife would be able to unravel the mystery, but the cool iron grill before Rocky's door looked so inviting.

He smiled at her. "I'm sorry for all my rudeness," he said.

"Oh it's all right. I'm about ready to be handed over to the police anyway." She felt weary and reckless.

"There's something about you that drives me wild. I've seldom met a girl who could get my goat as successfully as you can."

"I must be wonderful that way," Doris agreed.

They entered the elevator, and Rocky pushed the button. The tiny elevator was painted dull blue and decorated with three large mirrors.

Looking at herself Doris saw that she was flushed and bright-eyed from the heat. She thought that she had never looked better in her life, nor felt worse.

The elevator stopped. Rocky opened the door.

"Doris, Doris!"

Rocky's voice boomed emptily through the apartment.

Rocky's wife was not there. As they went in they saw that the place had not been occupied for a long time. Dust lay on everything, and there was evidence that an untidy job of packing had been done there, but not recently.

"H—I!" said Rocky. "My devoted wife seems to have left me, bag and baggage. She didn't even leave me a note as far as I can discover." He bent over Doris and seized her suddenly by the shoulders. "And now, my dear young lady, it's up to you to explain. Just exactly what is the game?"

Doris stared back at him. "Take your hands off my shoulders."

"When you answer my question."

But the glare in her eyes had had its effect. She saw that he was pretending to be more angry than he actually was. They seemed to have reached a deadlock. "This is silly," said Doris. "You know perfectly well I know no more about your stupid old wife than you do."

A slight grin announced that Rocky knew himself beaten. His grip on her shoulders became more friendly. "So you think Doris is stupid."

The girl flushed. She did think so, rather she had conceived a dislike for Rocky's wife for some reason not clear to herself. Yet she did not want Rocky to think so. "I think it's stupid to hear so much about her," she said faintly. "I don't know whether she's actually stupid or not."

"You sweet," said Rocky unexpectedly and kissed her.

It seemed forever that his lips stayed on hers, but it was actually only a moment before she was pushing him away. "I don't think I care at all about having you kiss me," she said confusedly. "I don't believe—"

Fruits in Order for Daily Menus

Furnish Vitamin Supplies, Specially Important, at Small Cost.

A new interest is being shown by housekeepers in the relation of food value and cost. Foods are being chosen not only by taste, not only, in regard to food value, but in regard to the relation of cost to these other factors.

One of the bright spots in the life of the woman who considers all these things is the fact that fruit has been and is at an unusually low price. Fruits contribute largely to our supply of minerals and vitamins.

The fruits that are used most often in our daily life are probably oranges, bananas, and apples, all of which are now staple in our markets. While all of us like a variety in our foods, we can safely choose our fruits with reference to price, as far as food value and taste are concerned. If, for instance, you find a bargain in bananas, which are now at a particularly low price, you use them as your principal fruit for the week, if you use such vegetables as cabbage or lettuce as well. The same is true of apples.

A very interesting comparison of fruits commonly used has been made recently by Doctor Eddy of Columbia university. Fruits are compared in reference to the important mineral content to the content of vitamins A-B-C, the best known vitamins. (B has been divided into two parts—one known as G—but these parts are usually found together in various proportions.) You will note how these vary. You will not depend, for instance, upon prunes for Vitamin C, but you can get a large amount of Vitamin A from them. Next in A content comes bananas, which also supply some units of B and C.

It is only recently that we have been able to confine the vitamin content of food in units. For a long time comparison was made much more generally by checks one, two and three. Of course not all foods have yet been tested by units, but work is continuing in this respect.

In checking cost of food in comparison to food value at the prices indicated, oranges would be the cheapest source of Vitamin C; prunes and bananas the cheapest sources of Vitamin A. If raw cabbage was used for salad to furnish Vitamin C, your diet would be balanced both for cost and vitamin.

The banana, it is interesting to note, has arrived at a new standing in this dietary in the past few years. It has always been a favorite treat for children, but had been considered not too easy of digestion until it was discovered that a ripe and an unripe banana were completely different as far as digestion was concerned. The ripe banana is now being used in infant feeding. The crushed pulp is given a very early age. For best digestion, either for old or young, bananas whose skins are slightly flecked with brown should be used for eating raw. If bananas are to be cooked, it makes no difference whether they are ripe or unripe. Baked, sautéed and broiled bananas are used often now as dessert or as a meat accompaniment. They are also used as apples are in the preparation of such desserts as brown betty.

Bananas With Bacon.

½ pound bacon

Roll half lengths of peeled bananas in strips of bacon. Secure with toothpick, if necessary. Broil under flame; or bake in oven-proof dish in a hot oven, 40 degrees Fahrenheit, about 15 minutes, or until bananas are tender and bacon is crisp. Bake at least once during the baking. Whole bananas may be wrapped in bacon and cooked in the same way.

Fried Carrots and Apples.

4 medium-sized carrots
4 tart apples
2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon salt

Scrape the carrots and cut them lengthwise into thin slices. Core apples but do not pare and cut into slices about ¼ of an inch thick. Place a single layer of the apples and the carrots in a large skillet with the butter, cover tightly and cook until well browned, turn, and brown the other side. Just before the cooking is finished sprinkle with the sugar and salt.

Banana and Apple Brown Betty.

3 cups bread
3 tablespoons butter
2 apples
3 bananas
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Cut bread into dice and saute with butter until brown. Peel apples and bananas, cut very thin. Dredge with sugar mixed with cinnamon. Cover Star.

bottom of baking dish with the bread, then add fruit and remaining bread in alternate layers, saving a few of the crumbs to put on top. Bake one-half hour, covered, and the last fifteen minutes uncovered, in a moderate oven, 375 degrees Fahrenheit.

If you want to GET RID of Constipation worries—

Science says Today use a LIQUID Laxative

1. Control intestinal action exactly—no "purging"
2. Measure to suit your individual needs to the drop
3. Banish Bowel Fatigue and the laxative habit

Here's Why:

Any hospital offers evidence of the harm done by harsh laxatives that drain the system, weaken the bowel muscles, and in some cases even affect the liver and kidneys.

A doctor will tell you that the unwise choice of laxatives is a common cause of chronic constipation. Fortunately, the public is fast returning to the use of laxatives in liquid form.

A properly prepared liquid laxative brings a perfect movement. There is no discomfort at the time and no weakness after. You don't have to take "a double dose" a day or two later.

In buying any laxative, always read the label. Not the claims, but the contents. If it contains one doubtful drug, don't take it.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription preparation in which there are no mineral drugs. Its ingredients are on the label. By using it, you avoid danger of bowel strain. You can keep the bowels regular, and comfortable; you can make constipated spells as rare as colds.

The liquid test:

This test has proved to many men and women that their trouble was not "weak bowels," but strong cathartics:

First. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Take the dose you find is suited to your system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving regularly without any need of stimulation.

Syrup pepsin has the highest standing among liquid laxatives, and is the one generally used. It contains senna, a natural laxative which is perfectly safe for the youngest child. Your druggist has Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.
